

February 2019

According to the U.S. Surgeon General, secondhand smoke exposure is harmful at any level. Therefore, many cities and counties in California have taken steps to protect their residents from this danger by passing ordinances that restrict smoking in outdoor areas where people congregate, such as entryways of buildings. California state law prohibits smoking within 20 feet of entrances, exits or operable windows of public buildings (which includes state, county and city buildings) but municipalities are not preempted from prohibiting smoking near the entryways of all other buildings.

There are 159 municipalities in California that have passed ordinances to prohibit smoking near the entryways of all buildings and enclosed areas where smoking is prohibited. The table below lists all of these cities and counties and divides the policies into two categories:

1. Municipalities that prohibit smoking within 20 (or more) feet of entryways

There are 134 municipalities with this type of policy. This is the strongest type of restriction, ensuring that residents will not be exposed to secondhand smoke within 20 feet of entryways and essentially extending the state law to all buildings.

2. Municipalities that prohibit smoking within 19 (or less) feet of entryways, within an unspecified distance of entryways, or only near some entryways

There are 25 municipalities with this type of policy. Such policies do protect people from secondhand smoke near entryways but set a standard that is lower than the state law for public buildings. Some of these municipalities simply prohibit smoking within “a reasonable distance” of entryways but do not define that distance. This creates uncertainty about the distance restrictions and makes the local law difficult to enforce. Other policies prohibit smoking only near the entryways of certain buildings.
